Crews it developed was a negro youth employed in an Albany garage and Napoleon was Napoleon Robinson, 24, another negro of that city, who was arrested following a thrilling chase through the downtown streets of Kingston on Friday morning. The Kingston police received word later that a warrant was to be sworn out by the Albany authorities charging Napoleon with the theft of the 1934 Buick car he was driving when caught here through the fine police work of Motorcycle Officer George Flowers of the local department.

Officer Bowers started today that he was riding his motorcycle on Broadway when he saw the new Buick car approaching with two negroes riding in it. There was something about the incident that induced him to investigate and he turned his machine and started after the Buick. Constable, who was driving a car officer, turned his motorcycle and immediately stepped on the gas and shot through McCuttee street at top speed, swerving into Wurts street on two wheels and again into Rogers street and down that narrow street and hill into Broadway. Down Broadway shot the Buick at fully 70 miles an hour. With Bowers as close behind as pos-

On Monday President Roosevelt will send to Congress a bill for approximately $1,322,000,000 to be spent in the next fiscal year on public works. The sum is considerably less than was expected, because he is reducing various appropriations hitherto granted and appropriations for veterans which were said to be "unforeseen". These moves were made in order to keep the total appropriation for next year within the estimates made in his budgets message on January 4.

The inevitable inference that appropriations for public works and relief for next year have been cut occasioned some concern in view of the fact that unless the pace of recovery is greatly speeded up there will be many millions of unemployed to be cared for next year. The severe drought in the west also adds to the potential relief burden.

The situation in the drought-afflicted states was serious enough to engage the lengthy attention of the cabinet this afternoon while fine dust particles which originated in the plowed fields of the Dakotas and Nebraska filtered in the White House windows and settled on the most important officials of the government.

It was officially stated that if the relief burden next year exceeded the estimates from which direct provision had been made, there were other funds that could be diverted to relief. Unexpended PWA funds and superfluous RFC funds would be the chief reserves for such expenditures, although there are some smaller reserve items tucked away here and there.

At his press conference President Roosevelt said that most of the discussion by the Cabinet was with regard to conditions in various types of localities. The Federal Emergency Relief Administration and Department of Agriculture have received reports that the prolonged drouth, accompanied by wind storms, had had serious effects in many parts of

President's Mother Talks Of Mother's Day

Mrs. Roosevelt Says Son's Fame 'Seems Natural' Now

By WILLIAM T. MCLEERY.

NEW YORK, May 12 (AP)—Mother's Day is a subject Mrs. James Roosevelt decides to embellish with sentimentality, even in talking of Mother's day.

She doesn't expect a special Mother's day greeting from her son, the President of the United States, because he never made much of the occasion. He telephones her frequently, though, and she spends a quiet week-end at the White House now and then.

When he was a boy he gave her what might amount to Mother's day gifts, but they came with a spontaneous disregard for calendar days. "He used to make things for me—little brackets to put on the wall," she recalled. "And he painted pictures for me. He had a great deal of skill with his hands."

"A Little Philosophy Helps"

"People don't care about me," she insisted with obvious sincerity. "I was talking with a friend the other day. 'I'm tired of reading about the Roosevelt,' she said. 'I prefer to be left in the background.'"

"How does it feel to be the mother of a president?" she was asked. She paused thoughtfully.

"One learns to take things as a matter of course," she replied, slowly. "Of course, when he was a boy I had no idea he would be President. And yet, now that he is, it seems quite natural that he should be. I think God intended things to be that way."

"You know," she added, "a little philosophy helps a great deal."

Persons attempting to analyze the character of the vigorous, optimistic man in the White House frequently attribute much of his courage and mental stamina to his long association with infantile paralysis. His mother disagreed.

He Couldn't Turn Back.

"It may have increased his resistance," she said, "but it didn't turn back. He speaks like all of my family—and like his father, too."

She turned her eyes toward a large portrait of James Roosevelt, the President's father, hanging over a desk laden with feminine writing accessories.

Red-Haired Footman.

Mrs. Roosevelt sat in a high-back armchair in the second floor library of her house on Sixty-fifth street. Her lively conversation and her appearance made it difficult to believe she is 45 years old. She spoke of it as a matter of fact.

A large painting of the President hangs over the fireplace. Other paintings and photographs around the room furnished a warm background for the handsome gray-haired woman.

There is nothing ostentatious about the Roosevelt town house, although it stands in an exclusive neighborhood and is richly furnished. There is a footman in livery; but he has red hair, grins agreeably and talks about the weather and the stock market in a hospitable manner. His name is Robert and he has been with Mrs. Roosevelt 15 years.

While she faces "proud and privileged" to have seen her son enter the White House, Mrs. Roosevelt has a decided distaste for personal publicity. Only on rare occasions, nowadays, does she consent to interviews.

One gets the impression from Mrs. Roosevelt's easy, informal conversation that the relationship between the President and his mother is one of comfortable understanding, requiring no damp-eyed demonstrations of affection.

There is a marked resemblance between mother and son. They have the same well-shaped head, the same strong chin and the same cordial good humor. The resemblance is particularly striking when she speaks.

"Of course we talk alike," she said, smiling. "I brought him up, didn't I? He speaks like all of my family—and like his father, too."

She turned her eyes toward a large portrait of James Roosevelt, the President's father, hanging over a desk laden with feminine writing accessories.

Mrs. James Roosevelt feels "proud and privileged" to see her son in the White House. There is a striking resemblance between the President and his mother... and a bond of comfortable understanding. She doesn't expect a greeting from him on Mother's day, particularly, "because we never made much of the occasion."

"Why, mother," he said, "I couldn't turn back and let the rest of them go on."

The President's mother does not feel qualified to appraise modern mothers.

"I'm of another generation," she explained. "Why—I have great grandchildren!"

On Nursery Schools

She did mention the tendency of parents to bundle their children off to boarding schools earlier than they did when she was bringing up her son. He had his schooling at home until he was 14. In some cases she supposes it's a good thing, but she chuckles over a conversation she had recently with one of her great-grandchildren, aged 3, who was attending a nursery school.

"What do you do at school?" she asked him.

"Oh, nothing," he said.

"Well, what do they teach you?" "Nothing," he reflected a moment. "I have a music teacher."

"Oh, does he teach you to play the piano?"

"No."

"To sing?"

"No." The little boy hesitated thoughtfully. "Grandma," he decided, "I think you better come to school with me and find out what we do."

Mrs. Roosevelt laughed heartily. "I believe the most important thing for children to learn is honesty," she said. "The difference between true and false, between thine and mine. It doesn't matter so much where they learn it."

F. D. R.'s Political Start

The Roosevelts didn't discuss politics much when Franklin was a boy. But intelligent, well-informed people came to their house. Franklin liked listening to them and they liked talking to the earnest, good-looking boy. James Roosevelt was a keen student of public affairs, national and international. Mrs. Roosevelt thinks those influences probably aroused the President's first interest in politics.

She made a particular effort to sharpen the interest.

"I think it's natural for intelligent people to be concerned about politics," she concluded.

Last Tuesday afternoon the Elmer Garden Club held its first meeting of the month with Mrs. Antonio Knauth at her home on Albany avenue. In view of the fact that most of the club members were planning to attend the Junior League production of "Jack and the Beanstalk," Mrs. Knauth postponed the meeting until 5 o'clock. As the topic for discussion was "Pool Building and Planting," Mrs. Knauth, in having her gardener transplant an English yew tree, gave a practical as well as interesting demonstration of soil preparation and the proper method of setting out a tree. This was followed by an examination and study of Mrs. Knauth's garden pool which was being rebuilt and enlarged. Mrs. William Warren, the president, then brought the business meeting to a close after which the hostess served her guests a buffet supper in her garden, which is certainly one of the loveliest in the city. The next meeting of the club will be with Mrs. Herman A. Kelley, May 22, at her home at St. Remy.

Tuesday afternoon, May 15, at 3 o'clock, there will be a meeting of the Mothers' Association of the Academy of St. Ursula, at the school auditorium. At this time final plans will be made for the garden party to be held on the afternoon and evening of May 22.

A Washington Daybook

By HERBERT PLUMMER

WASHINGTON—The latest addition to that rapidly defunct but much discussed governmental group known as the "brain trust" has made its appearance at the treasury. At least the group of treasury officials who gather with Secretary Morgenthau every morning of the week for a conference which usually lasts from 30 minutes to an hour have been so designated.

Newsman assigned to cover the treasury haven't been able to find out what transpires at these regular morning conferences. Their best guess is that current and future policies are thrashed out.

Certainly the "brains" of the department are present. A roll call would disclose such names as the following:

Secretary Morgenthau, Herman Oliphant, general counsel to the secretary, Herbert Gaston, in charge of press relations; William H. Reynolds, administrative assistant to the secretary, and T. Jefferson Coolidge, recently appointed under-secretary.

Treasury Revamped

THERE was a time when the treasury was probably the most decentralized department of government in Washington. Since Morgenthau took control, however, it has become just the reverse.

Where in former days the secretary remained aloof, almost apart from personal contact with his various bureaus and their chiefs, Mor-genthau has a fairly good idea of everything going on in the department.

Once a week he holds a regular staff meeting of all his bureau chiefs, from the collector of the taxes of internal revenue to the chief of the secret service.

The problems of each bureau are canvassed and talked over. These weekly meetings are much the same as the executive of a big business concern would have with his subordinates.

Roosevelt Hand Seen

An excellent example of how Morgenthau goes in for this sort of thing is the recent meeting he had here with collectors of internal revenue from all over the country. There plans were made to launch an intensive campaign to collect back taxes owed the government.

Many profess to see the hand of President Roosevelt in this newly organized treasury efficiency. It wouldn't be far wrong, perhaps, to say that Mr. Roosevelt is his own secretary of the treasury. Certainly his hand has been clearly evident in all policies pursued by that department thus far in his administration.

And this much is known, too: Mr. Roosevelt has a standing weekly luncheon date at the White House with Secretary Morgenthau. Usually it's Monday at one o'clock and treasury problems are discussed as they lunch around the President's wide, flat-top desk in the executive office.

The official opening will be on Monday and everyone is invited to see these displays. The chairman of the different committees are Children's gardens, Mrs. Frederick Bond of Milton; home furnishings, Mrs. Raymond LeFevre of Lomontville; household management, Miss Bertha Coons of Accord; foods, Mrs. Frank Black of Modena; clothing, Mrs. John Dederick of Lake Katrine; landscaping, Mrs. William A. Warren of Hurley, and crafts, Mrs. George Brown of Flatbush.

Tomorrow Mrs. William Coles of 76 Malden Lane will be given a Mother's Day celebration by her children and grandchildren who will gather at her home.

Miss Margaret Herbert of New York city is the week-end guest of Mrs. Everett Fowler at her home on Malden Lane.

Miss Josephine Van Graveness of Wheeling, West Virginia, where she spent the winter with her sister, Mrs. R. R. Kitchen.

On Wednesday, May 9, the Saugerties Society of the Little Gardens held its tenth anniversary luncheon at the tea room of Mrs. Frank Phelps on Main street. The table was especially arranged for gardeners with a maize damask cloth and a large garden basket filled with pansies and ivy. Single plants in tiny ornamental baskets at each guests' place, gave the appearance of a pansy border. There were thirty members of the society together with a number of out of town guests. The luncheon opened with an invocation written by the Rev. John Neander and read by Mrs. Theodore Gorkov. Mrs. Harold Dederick and Mrs. Fred Van Voorhis sang soprano solos. They were accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Wemple. Mrs. Peter Ehnogott contributed an original poem dedicated to the club. This was read by Mrs. Lewis. Miss Isabel Overbaugh then reviewed the history of the club during the ten years of its existence. Three officers of the Federated Garden Clubs of New York then gave short addresses. Mrs. Ralph Pratt, chairman, Port Jefferson, N. Y.; Mrs. Chaucery D. Hakes of Albany; and Mrs. John D. Draper of Hastings-on-Hudson. At the conclusion of these talks Mrs. Henchman and Mrs. Hakes each received a rose bush from the club. The birthday cake with its ten candles and May pole decoration was cut by Mrs. Henchman and Mrs. Hakes who presided at the luncheon. Other guests of honor were Mrs. J. V. Wemple and Mrs. William Small of Balmaine, Mrs. B. E. Gurney of Newburgh, president of the Community Garden Club of Marlborough, Mrs. William A. Warren, president of Ulster Garden Club, Mrs. William C. Rose, president Shawangunk Garden Club of Ellenville; Miss Helen Loughran, president Little Garden Club of Kingston, and Miss Bessie Brewster also of that club.

Foods raised in regions where iodine is prevalent contain less iodine than that raised elsewhere.

Yesterday and today the committees are busily arranging for the county wide exhibit of Home Bureau work to be shown in the Herbert Carl Millinery store on Wall street. This exhibit will include a showing of children's gardens, household furnishings, clothing, foods, crafts and landscaping. One of the most helpful of the groups will be a replica of a room before and after it was improved through applying information of home furnishing and decoration taught through the Home Bureau.

Mocking House

BY WALTER C. BROWN

Chapter 14
 WORK BEGINS

"ONLY the central fact is obvious," Harper said. "Two men were killed in this room last night. The reason for that is anything but a mystery. I have some sort of a theory, but I won't even think about it until the facts are in my possession. And that," he added, smiling grimly, "may blow my theory sky high."

Mrs. Croft looked around at the various evidences of the police search and research and made a remark of disapproval when her eyes rested on the chair with the dead man's clothing. "I am so sorry for that poor policeman," she remarked, with a shudder.

"Yes, that was too bad," Harper's lips tightened. "Officer Hamilton, a brave and fine fellow. That is what happens to many poor policemen's widows."

"Stop, please—you make it sound so real."

Aline made an eloquent gesture. "Stop, please," she begged. "You make it sound so real. I can see that poor man walking up the steps, leaving his footprints in the snow, not knowing that he was going to his death."

She paused, then went on earnestly. "Of course, we shall do everything possible to assist you, Mr. Harper. I know there are lots of questions you want to ask about the house, and the servants, and all that sort of thing. Please feel free to call upon me at any time for such information. It is my sister's home, but I am perfectly familiar with all the details."

Harper bowed. "Thank you, Mrs. Croft. I shall have lots of questions, but first I have to chart my line of inquiry."

Aline smiled in her friendly manner. "There are many questions I would like to ask, too," she replied. "But I'll restrain my curiosity until a more auspicious time. Meanwhile, all our facilities are at your disposal. I suppose you will be in this room a great deal?"

"Yes, this will be my office and headquarters while I am working on the case."

"I'll leave you to your labors, then," she responded, "and I wish you success."

"Thank you again, Mrs. Croft. We'll have our talk later in the day," Aline nodded, and, smiling graciously, withdrew.

"THIS is a fine, pleasant-spoken lady," he said. "Sergeant," was the policeman-guard's comment after she had gone. "Good-looking, too!" Harper had almost forgotten the man's presence. "Yes, she is," he agreed, "a very charming lady. Indeed, if every one else in the house is as frank and cordial it will make this job a lot easier. I'm afraid some of the others are going to be any thing but helpful. By the way, what's your name?"

"O'Connell, sir."

"You understand, O'Connell, that no one is to disturb anything in this room. I'll be in and out of here all the time and I want you to keep an eye on things."

"You can trust me, Sergeant. An order is an order."

Politics at Random

By SYMON PRICE
 (From the Associated Press)

SOME adroit shadow-boxing explains why the tax bill went through so readily. The subject of taxation is approached by all politicians with fear and trembling, especially in a campaign year. It is an axiom that anyone who votes for an increase will have a lot of explaining to do at home.

But the government needed money badly, and something had to be done. At first it was given out that the purpose was to plug up the loopholes through which certain big bankers and others were escaping income tax payments. The reaction generally was good.

THEN, without much advertisement, some tax rate increases were written in. The situation began to get sticky, however, when it developed that even greater increases were needed after the veterans' federal pay allowances were voted over a veto.

The senate took off the lid, well knowing that its higher rates probably would be scaled down in conference, making taxpayers glad they had escaped the worst. In the end, the bigger pocketbooks were made to stand the rate.

It was either that kind of a pill or some for neither party would have supported so near election time, a measure increasing the burden on the back of the voters.

"The Little Fellow" WHAT to do about "the little fellow" continues to be a puzzle for NRA. One strong group in the administration still thinks the codes should be confined to the major industries.

When General Johnson was asked about that at his chamber of commerce round-table, he didn't reply categorically. He said the Darrow board had it under review. The board has heard many complaints.

NRA officials know that, especially in many small communities, "the little fellow" isn't observing the codes, and local authorities are winking at violations.

In the national capital, itself, a garage proprietor was asked to come to headquarters to explain a violation. He showed up flanked by a group of competitors representative of the garage industry of Washington. Nothing happened to him.

One state administrator, instructed to canvass small plants in his territory as to the feasibility of imposing new regulations (and having no funds to conduct such a canvass) asked on his own, and replied: "Sentimental state 99 per cent unfavorable."

No other question is more troublesome to those considering a permanent set-up for NRA.

Liquor Question Remains POLITICIANS do not overlook the possibility that the liquor question may yet be an important political issue in 1935.

Even among the wets there are those who concede the present system isn't working so well. Federal Administrator Choate says bootlegging still flourishes. Some states are permitting liquor sales on Sundays, and to children.

It arouses interesting possibilities when so ardent a repealist as Senator Walsh of Massachusetts warns that the country "will not tolerate" some of the things now allowed under state laws.

The liquor problem has been a problem for many generations; evidence accumulates that this generation will not see it settled finally.

CHILDREN DAYDREAM TO ESCAPE TASKS THEY DISLIKE Ithaca, May 12.—Making a child interested in a certain task is more effective than punishment, says Dr. Kurt Lewin, German child psychologist, who is studying at the New York state college of home economics.

"If a child really wants to solve a problem," he notes, "he will come back to it again and solve it in spite of difficulties. Punishment which forces him to attack a problem which he dislikes works in a different way."

If the task is more disagreeable than the punishment, the child will deliberately choose the punishment to escape the task. Dr. Lewin explains. This is especially true when the child feels no social disapproval attached to the punishment. The child's attitude toward punishment is more important than the punishment itself, because if he feels the disgrace keenly he is eager to avoid it. The child may become hardened to resist punishment and feel it far less than a disagreeable task he wishes to avoid.

When the child faces an unpleasant task and punishment, he may try to run away from both. To combat this, the adult who punishes must set up barriers. Dr. Lewin states. For example, the child may be locked in a room and told he must finish the task before gaining his freedom, or a definite time limit may be set to complete the job. But the difficulty here is that the child may find something else to do instead of his task. Daydreaming is one important way children escape from disagreeable problems.

Dr. Lewin mentions the story told by the author Tolstoy in his autobiography. As a boy, the account reads, Tolstoy imagined that the czar of Russia offered him anything he wanted. He demanded only that his schoolmaster be banished.

Because the adult is stronger than the child, the German psychologist notes, punishment in place of doing a task means a strong feeling of pressure for the child. The kind of punishment does not matter. When punishment is needed, Dr. Lewin urges that it be reduced as much as possible and accomplished in an impersonal and friendly way. Punishment, he says, even if successful in getting a task performed is sometimes not best for the child.

Habitat of the Lion Within the historic period the geographic range of the lion covered all of Africa and southwestern Asia, including Arabia, Syria, Asia Minor, Persia and the greater part of North central and western India. It is possible that they existed in Greece in the time of Herodotus. In prehistoric time the lion existed over the greater part of Europe and North America. The lion is practically extinct outside of Africa, although there are probably a few specimens in Arabia and Persia. That the lion was historically common in Persia is shown by the fact that it is the national emblem.

Norway's Capital The ancient name of Norway's capital was Oslo, and according to Norwegian tradition was founded in 1048 by King Harald Haardraade. In 1624 the city was destroyed by fire and King Christian IV rebuilt it on the opposite side of the Akre river and named it Kristiania, or Christiania in English. After the World war a movement began in Norway to have the name of the capital changed back to Oslo. This was accomplished on July 11, 1924. After January 1, 1925, the official name of the capital was Oslo.

Reciprocity A remarkable example of the vital interdependence which sometimes occurs between a plant and an animal is that of the yucca shrub and the yucca moth. The plant is fertilized by pollen that is brought to it only by this moth, and the moth's larvae are fed by food that is produced only by this plant—O'Brien's Weekly.

Talks to Parents

By BROOKE PETERS CHURCH

Mrs. Smith was a traveling man and Mr. Smith, nervous at being left alone, kept a loaded revolver in her bureau drawer. Tommy Smith found it one day, and took it out to show his friends.

Of course he pulled the trigger, and tragedy resulted. It is a stock case, repeated almost every day in some form or other. To have a loaded gun about is to court disaster. No boy can withstand the temptation of playing with firearms, and invariably he assumes the gun is not loaded, with the result that someone is injured or killed.

If a gun is to be part of the household equipment, everyone should be taught as early as possible not only how to use it, but also the proper precautions to take. No one should be allowed to point it at another person, or to look down the barrel, even if he knows beyond doubt that it is empty. An unloaded weapon should be used with as much respect as a loaded one, simply to form the habit of care and precaution.

It probably would have been far safer for Mrs. Smith to risk the chance of intruders, than to have a loaded revolver in her possession. Even a gun with cartridges temptingly near is dangerous if there are likely to be uninformed and enterprising small boys about the place.

The Smith children might be forewarned against any contingency, and might even be trained to leave the revolver alone, but their friends the Brown and Jones children might ask to have a look and then a chance to try the coveted gun.

Even the most responsible child is not always immune to the persuasions of his "gang," and parents must be prepared for every possible emergency.

DID YOU KNOW THAT

Net is being worn in daytime developments, the all-net costume as well as the costume with crepe frock and net coat or jacket, with navy, brown and black all approved.

Cottons are receiving attention also, for daytime as well as evening, with dotted Swiss, gingham, seersucker, embroidered batiste and organdy all employed, and that linens in great variety promise to play an important part in summer wardrobes. Linens and cottons are often velvet trimmed.

The shirtwaist influence persists in evening and dinner fashions, observed in costumes developed in taffeta or crepe, the bodice in organdy, batiste, or chiffon, with buttoned detail at the front, and with the long sleeves fastening with links at the wrists.

The interest in taffeta is continued in summer collection, both in daytime and evening fashions, with the roof garden ensemble that introduces a short fitted jacket frequently featured.

High style collections include many novelty versions of shantung for the de luxe spectator sports dress and costume.

There are many instances of the fabric belt that agrees or contrasts with the dress it is worn with, belts that are rather wide and make an important part of the costume.

The ideal evening wrap for spring nights, it appears, is the short fur capelet or, less often, the jacket.

Evening bags are more and more sparkling, with metal kids, with metal fabrics, with mirror details with beads. Their size is fairly small and usually envelope shape.

Striped and plaid taffeta hats are seen with blouses or neckwear to match.

Combining stripes in this two-piece bathing suit, second from the left, is effectively done. The shorts are ribbed, the top a flat knit with rope button. Both are in seersucker. White, yellow and orange are linked. Table cloth plaid here is used for the shorts coupled with synthetic jersey high-or-low neck shirt.

Ruffled bathing suit, above, is in black tulle, the ruffle worked up toward the back, copying the ruffle treatment of evening gown.

Stuffed-out bodice is combined with seersucker bathing trunks in the third figure. The model is in a striped seersucker with red, white and blue.

Colored bathing suits are seen occasionally this year. This one is in synthetic jersey in dark brown with club collar in white and blue back.

Interesting Program For Hospital Day

Beneditine Hospital With Coliseum on Sunday—Purpose of Hospital Day—Public Invited.

National Hospital and Nursing Day will be celebrated tomorrow at the Beneditine Hospital with an interesting program. One of the most remarkable successes achieved in the way of a "day" is National Hospital Day, which is celebrated only in the United States and Canada, but in a number of other countries as well.

The purpose of National Hospital Day is purely educational. No funds or donations are asked for or expected, and the idea is to give to the public an opportunity to visit a hospital and see for themselves how an institution of this kind is conducted, so that they may realize how important its work is to the whole community. Many young women are fitted for the nursing profession by the schools of nursing maintained by hospitals, and such workers in allied fields as dietitians, social workers and laboratory technicians receive an important part of their training in hospitals.

The Benedictine Hospital therefore opens its doors tomorrow and invites the public at large to be inquisitive and to observe its functioning. Afterwards an appropriate program will be conducted. Attractive

HOLLYWOOD SIGHTS & SOUNDS

By ROBBIN COONS

HOLLYWOOD—The actress that was golden in Norma Talmadge's screen career was maintained longer than usual about her private life. Filicand romances often are shattered for months before either principal will admit that all is over. Miss Talmadge, actually parted from Joseph Schenck, her producer-husband, in 1927, maintained silence on the subject for five years. Not until 1932 did she admit what all Hollywood knew—that this marital team of producer and star, inaugurated in 1916, was functioning merely as a professional and friendly partnership. Talk of divorce, which she often contemplated, got no definite answer until the other day, when news broke of a decree obtained in Mexico. Of friendly separations, common in Hollywood, there was among the oddest. Marital estrangement did not keep Norma from seeking advice from the doughty producer whose guidance elevated her from a position among the lesser stars to the glided eminence she once enjoyed in silent films.

Appears With Jesse!

It was under Schenck's banner at United Artists that Norma, frankly nervous about microphones, made her unsuccessful attempts to establish herself in the first, and "New York Nights," her first, and "DuBarry," her second and last talking picture, indicated she was not to retain her fan following. Perhaps clinging to an earlier idea, often expressed, that she could not be happy unless working, Miss Talmadge in the last few years has devoted herself to personal appearances. Her partner was George Jesse, the stage star with whose name her own has been coupled romantically for some time. To the newest generation of film fans, Norma Talmadge is perhaps only a name. But she was a part of the amazing history of the silent screen, and for years one of its brightest stars. The Talmadge sisters—Norma, Constance and Natalie—and their mother, "Peg," who died last year, were one of filmland's most important families.

May Try Comeback

She rose to fame and to a substantial stardom after her marriage to Schenck. But movie times change quickly. Already some of the films she adorned at her height are being remade with other stars. "Camille," one of Norma's big hits, is being considered for Greta Garbo. Dolores Del Rio currently is starring in "DuBarry." And even her first hit, "A Tale of Two Cities," is on schedule for Leslie Howard. Nevertheless, should she attempt a comeback now, as some in Hollywood believe she will, many fans will watch the outcome with interest.

At The Theatres

Today
Kingston: "We're Not Dressing." If you look hard enough, you will discover that this musical study in human conduct was adapted from J. M. Barrie's "The Admirable Crichton." When Sir James Barrie wrote this popular satire on the social order, he probably never dreamed of seeing it set to music, but here it is with the crooning Bing Crosby in the starring role. And what's more, it's exceptionally good entertainment, with many a gay laugh, a hilarious situation, etc., and Mr. Crosby sings his heart out in a group of new song hits written for the picture. In this show, Mr. Crosby is a common but tenuous sailor aboard the yacht of wealthy Carole Lombard. His job is to sing to Miss Lombard's pet bear, and he makes the most of it. Of course, he loves Miss Lombard with a deep devotion, but the social order keeps them as far apart as the planets. When the ship is wrecked on a tropical isle, the order changes. This talkie is good for many reasons. The first is the excellence of the cast. Supporting Mr. Crosby are such talented performers as Leon Errol, Ethel Merman, George Burns and Gracie Allen, Jay Henry, John Irwin and Charles Norris. It also has excitement, humor, intelligent direction and some very pleasant music. Worth seeing.

Orpheum: "Frontier Marshall" and "Notorious but Nice." George O'Brien cracks down on the evils of a border town in this clam-bang talkie of strong men and adoring women. Mr. O'Brien seems an ideal western hero, with his handsome profile and Lionel Strongfort appearance. The show lacks a single dull moment and is filled with lively adventure. Irene Bentley is the girl, "Notorious but Nice." The funniest thing about this show is the title. The picture is a bit musty with age but it has its occasional moments. The plot is spun about young ladies whose reputations are supposed to be tarnished. Marion Marsh and Betty Compton head the cast.

Broadway: "Vaudeville" and "She Made Her Bed." "George Lovett's" conversation song and mind reading novelty heads the bill of four special acts, and along with Mr. Lovett's offering the Broadway Theatre offers the work of "Frank and Ethel Carmen," "Raymond and Anna," and "Jeff Sayre and Company." One of the biggest features of this bill is its unusual diversity. "She Made Her Bed." The entertaining adventures of a young wife disgusted with her husband's bullying disposition and 100 per cent headstrong. She decides to go away with a handsome young friend who loves her but domestic complications cause trouble. This show is filled with laughs and surprises. For example, there is a big race at a special moment, and a tiger runs around loose in the final moments of the show. Richard Arlen, Robert Armstrong and Sally Eilers head the cast.

Saugerties Girl Graduates.
New York, May 11 (Special).—Miss Marcella Rita Hayes, of 19 Cedar street, Saugerties, was graduated from the Brooklyn Hospital school of nursing at the commencement exercises held last night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Forty-six graduates were presented with diplomas by Adrian Van Sinderen, president of the board of trustees. The principal address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. James Lee Eilenwood, state secretary of the Y. M. C. A. The hospital pins were distributed by Miss Anna Bentley, principal of the school. Following the exercises a reception was held at the nurses' home. A formal dance is being given for the graduates by the Junior class at the home tonight.

is the story of an old fashioned horse trader who groaned loud and long over his trading, but who always managed to get the best of the deal. The role of David Harum is taken by Will Rogers, and it is the best thing he has done on the screen. As the banker who finds time to indulge in a bit of fancy horse trading, Mr. Rogers is at his best, and the movie version of the novel intersperses many gay comedy moments and also gives Mr. Rogers a couple of opportunities to tell what is wrong with the world. The show has romance and one of the funniest horse races ever brought to the screen. Supporting the star are such players as Evelyn Venable and Kent Taylor.

In other words, James Cagney, in another of his hard boiled roles, this time as a young fellow with new ideas. He establishes a "lost Hell racket" and cleans up in a big way until a blonde dame comes along and interests him in the story of culture and refinement. Mr. Cagney decides that he and all the mugs connected with his racket shall become models. Emily Post would shout praise about this. It's the spot where the show really gets good in a comedy way. Alice White shows off in a show away from the star, and others in the cast are Bette Davis and Allen Jenkins.

Flashes of Life
Sketched in Brief

(By The Associated Press.)

Injured by Proxy.
Tupelo, Miss.—To Mrs. Pauline Hollandsworth goes the distinction of being injured "by proxy." She was milking a cow on her farm when lightning struck the cow and it fell on Mrs. Hollandsworth, breaking her leg.

Riotous Operations.
Philadelphia—Frank Fisher, 32, told police his operations were to blame for his part in a riot at county relief headquarters. "I have undergone two operations for stomach disorders recently," he said, "and I cannot buy the food my health demands on the $1.60 I get weekly from the relief board." He was warned against similar activities in the future—and released.

White Elephant.
Hoosick Falls, N. Y.—V. Bridge Shaw, supervisor of this village, has a white elephant on his hands—a safe he bought from the town clerk. After he bought the safe, Shaw learned that the combination did not come with it and that the town clerk, the last man to know the combination, had forgotten it. But Shaw is not dismayed. "A lot of other fellows have opened safes without combinations," he observed.

How to Get a Job.
Hamilton, Ont.—E. Price of Saltfleet knows how to get a job—find a faulty railroad track. Unemployed, he was walking down the Canadian National Railway track near his home when he noticed a crack under a rail. He walked two miles to report the fault to railway officials, who said it might have caused a serious mishap. And the road superintendent notified Price to report for duty on a steady job.

Paid In Full—35 Years Late
Nashville, Tenn.—Thirty-five years ago a young man stole two penny sticks of candy from a Robertson county merchant. The merchant—who did not even know of the loss—recently met an acquaintance, about 60 years old, in the street. "Here is $5 that you must accept," said the man, disclosing the theft. "This is the least that my conscience will permit me to hand you."

Overtime Games Friday's Feature Yanks Bow to Sox in 14 Heats, 6-7

By HUGH J. WILSON, Staff Writer
The Yankees and the Boston Red Sox played a 14-inning overtime game at Yankee stadium last night, the longest game in the history of the major leagues. The Yankees, who were leading 6-0 in the eighth inning, were defeated 6-7 by the Sox in a game that lasted 2 hours and 45 minutes.

THE STANDINGS

Cleveland Back in Second.
Cleveland moved back into second place in the American League yesterday, after the Sox had blown a 6-0 lead in the eighth.

Giants Lost, 2-3.
The National League's two extra-inning encounters ended close on the standing when Pittsburgh, and St. Louis, both in last place of the league, lost to the Cardinals, 2-3, in the tenth.

SPORT SLANTS

By ALAN J. GOULD
(Associated Press Sports Editor.)

It is still debatable whether Glenn Cunningham can outfoot Bill Bonthron, providing they are on anything like even terms for the final dash to the tape at the end of a mile run, but there is no question that the barrel-chested Kansas boy is far and away the most consistent miler this country has ever had.

Like a great artist, Bonthron has his super moments and a finishing "kick" that sends the thrills racing up and down the spine, but the order of the palm, with ribbons, goes to Cunningham for his consistency over a two-year stretch of competition in this country and Europe.

Galloping Glenn has been beaten only twice within this period—or three times, if you count the mile race he lost to Glen Dawson of Oklahoma one time last year when he failed to turn on the customary Cunningham "heat." The two occasions, however, are the most concerned, however, are the races Glenn lost to Venzke, at 1500 meters, and to Bonthron at one mile. Both were indoors and the margin each time was so thin that none but the judges could detect it.

Cunningham has now run at least five mile-races in less than 4:13 and is the only foot-racer in the world with the distinction of twice having beaten 4:10 for the distance.

They all may have the speed but Bonthron, Lovelock, Bacall—the three outstanding rivals of Cunningham for world honors—cannot show anything like the consistency of the Kansas.

East Gets "Break."

It seems pretty definite now that the big coast universities will not be represented by teams at the annual Intercollegiate A. A. A. track and field championships, the end of May at Philadelphia, for the first time since the war. In effect this gives the big meet back to the East, for only once in the last 15 years has an Eastern college been the winner. Yale's 1924 victory stands out like a shipwrecked sailor on a raft in the ocean of Far Western triumphs. Things got so bad in recent years that the I. C. A. A. A. meet was more like a dual contest between Stanford and Southern California than anything else.

Dean Cromwell's Trojans, who made it four titles in a row last year and a total of six triumphs in 10 years, will not be represented at all because of the responsibility of playing host to the National Collegiate A. A. A. championships late in June at Los Angeles. Southern California is posting a $20,000 guarantee for expenses of the N. C. A. A. meet and hardly can afford to finance sending a team all the way across the country, in addition.

Stanford and California may send one of two men, like John Lyman, the shotputter, and Bob Kiesel, the sprinter. The newest coast member, U. C. L. A. plans to enter Jimmy Luvall, crack quarter-miler, who won the 400-meter event in 46.9 seconds last spring at Harvard.

Mile Relay Record Tethering.
Paul Zimmerman writes us that Southern California has the world's one-mile relay record at its mercy, the 1:26.6 record now standing at 2:12.6 in the possession of Stanford University, and therefore none the less attractive to the Trojan chieftain.

The quartet counted upon to take it apart consists of John McCarthy, a sophomore with a 47.8 quarter-mile to his credit, Ed Ahloek, veteran of the American Olympic 1600-meter relay champions, 47.6; Harry Thompson, made-over sprinter, who has done 45 flat; and Al Fitch, a Stanford transfer, 45.2. "That," concludes Zimmerman, "leaves the boys 3:11.3, not taking into account the fact three of them will be enjoying the advantage of a running start. McCarthy has been clocked in 47 flat with a running start."

My Best SHOT

Leo's Putts Amaze, But Jigger's His Favorite Club.

By SID FEDER

Philadelphia's "P" Although he's famed for his "handicap-putting" putter and a rank with the best in the use of almost any club in the golf bag it's with the not-popular Jigger that Leo Diegel really enjoys working.

Not only is it his favorite club but the little-used iron has proved a blessing to the former P. G. A. champion on more than one occasion.

"The jigger," explains Diegel, "is in between a four and a five iron. It's longer than the mashie, not quite so long as the niblick.

"I remember once particularly," he recalls, "it was back in 1931 in the P. G. A. qualifying round at Goddard, White Plains, N. Y.

"On the fifth hole my drive sent the ball into heavy clover, behind a barn and lots of trees, as I remember.

"It looked just right for a jigger—and believe me it was. The iron sent the ball sailing over barn and trees, and it dropped within an inch of the hole."

Take it from Diegel, the man in the golfing business often gets tired of the game.

"I certainly do," he admits, "especially when the going isn't any too good. Then, too, I've averaged 250 days of golf a year for the last 10 years, and that's too much for anybody.

"For that reason, I'm cutting down to 125 days this year. Maybe it'll help my game."

He'd Rather Teach Than Play.

Diegel plans to spend his extra time showing others about the game at Philmont Country Club, where he is pro. He's starting a class for youngsters, with the idea that to learn the game best, one should begin early.

"I'm teaching five days a week," he says, "I get a bigger kick out of teaching than playing."

The putting stance that has given Diegel so much publicity—that crouching, arms akimbo address of the ball isn't giving any too good results these days.

"In the last two years I can remember 12 times in which failure of my putting has cost me a match or a title," he ruefully admits.

LEO DIEGEL

Reynolds Leads American Hitters, Cuyler Shows Way to the Nationals

New York, May 12 (P)—Carl Reynolds, the Boston Red Sox's ace, and husky Joe Vosmik of Cleveland stood out today as models of hitting consistency as they retained the first two places in the American and major league batting records through another week.

While only eleven of the 20 listed in the "first ten" of the two leagues a week ago remained in the lists after yesterday's games, Reynolds boosted his top-heavy hitting mark even higher while Vosmik cut his losses to a minimum and wound up tied with Kiki Cuyler, new National League leader for second place all around.

Reynolds cracked out 15 hits in 29 times at bat and finished with an average of .464, up twenty-eight points. Vosmik lost 24 points while Cuyler gained around 190 to attain the same average of .411.

Schryvers Scalp Manhattans, 6-3, Play Murray Hill Club on Sunday

Meeting Kitty Kelly's Manhattan

All Stars, one of the best semi-pro clubs around the metropolis, according to records. William C. Schryver's All Stars inaugurated their twilight schedule with a 6-3 victory Friday evening at the Athletic Field where approximately 1,000 fans turned out to see the duel, a five-bit affair for both clubs, with Ted Fraleigh of the locals settling down to pitch good ball after the first inning, the stanza in which the visitors got all of their runs.

Kitty Kelly turned in a spectacular performance at first base, pulling down a couple high throws and nabbing a bouncer in a fashion that would become any male player. Sunday afternoon at the Fair Grounds, the Schryvers will play the Murray Hill nine, whose pitcher will be "Cannonball" Cooper, formerly of Yale. Bill Thomas will toss for the Kingstonsians.

Next Wednesday the Schryvermen will play another twilight contest, meeting the strong Howard of Brooklyn, featuring "Speedball" Soden, once with Columbia University on the pitching mound.

P-T. A. No. 5

A very important meeting of the P-T. A. of School No. 5 was held last Tuesday afternoon. Preceding the business session Rose Ward and Harriet Mac Roberts entertained with tap dancing.

The nominating committee presented the following for election: President, Mrs. George Geisler; first vice president, Mrs. Fred Schwab; second vice president, Mrs. Joseph Sille; secretary, Mrs. Richard Schantz; treasurer, Mrs. Hardy Roosa. All were duly elected and also appointed as delegates to attend the annual district conference on Saturday, May 26, in Newburgh.

The sum of $29.69 was realized from the apron sale out to the parents, through the pupils. The P-T. A. sent 29 children from the Industrial Home to the Opera, "Hansel and Gretel," on April 27. Miss Gillotti won the prize of one dollar for having the most parents present at P-T. A. meetings during the term.

Meetings adjourned until fall. Opening of Casino. Gus's Casino on the New Paltz-Highland road in Lloyd will hold its grand opening tonight, inaugurating a series of Saturday dances. Music will be furnished by Harry Malsenholder's Commanders of Kingston.

Simon Trowbridge and Charles Van Gabeck of Olive Bridge are busy about the locality with their new truck mounted whitewash power spraying equipment for dairy barns and other outbuildings and orchards. Several jobs were done among farmers here on Thursday.

Both are hushers at their profession. The Ladies' Aid weekly quilting was held on Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Watson Bishop at West Shokan Heights. On Thursday afternoon several of the workers again assembled in order to finish the present masterpiece and make ready for another. During the week intervening Mrs. Bishop and her sister, Mrs. Davis, have devoted all available time to the quilting work.

HIGH FALLS

High Falls, May 12.—Stanley Steeg plowed the garden of Miss Mary Krom one day this week. Mrs. Charles Casper has returned home after spending a very pleasant time with her daughters in the city.

Dorothy Albert has not been able to go to school for a few days, due to a local infection. Mrs. Hannah Elting of Walden, who has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. George Hoffman and Mrs. Mosley Hoffman, returned home on Wednesday.

Mrs. Frank Davis spent Thursday with her father. Mary L. Hodge had the honor of being chosen as one of the attendants of the May Queen at Kingston High School.

Silas Niles has purchased a new car. Mrs. Stanley Steen and Miss Kathryn Steen spent Wednesday evening with Mrs. Mosley Hoffman, planning Children's Day program.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Snyder have just returned from a delightful 10 day vacation trip. At Newburgh they visited the George Monroe family and the Dr. W. H. Snyder's and Gilbert Calver's, all connected with old High Falls families. The Rev. and Mrs. Herman Hagaman of Claverack, a former pastor and friend here, were also at Mrs. Snyder's. They were also at Mrs. Snyder's, and all attended the sessions of Particular Synod. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder then motored to Ossining with the Feltnans and also enjoyed a trip to Yonkers, stopping with the family of Wilbur Benjamin. Mr. Snyder of Rosendale called on Marvin Wagheon on Wednesday afternoon.

People will be interested to hear that Robert Agnew was recently married to a California girl. Their friends here extend congratulations and wish them great happiness.

The large maple tree near the house of Mrs. Preston Church, rented by Herbert Ayers and family, was blown down in Thursday's storm, striking the house and breaking the corner of the roof in. The chicken houses of Mrs. Chester succumbed to the gale, and the roadway in many places had to be cleared of the debris caused by the fallen trees.

Mrs. Johnson of Kingston is now with Mrs. Sara Agnew. We trust that as the summer draws near, Mrs. Agnew may gain in strength.

Miss Mary Krom, who has been spending the winter months with her sister, Mrs. Etta Sahler, is now getting ready to move down in her home in the village for the summer. Mrs. Krom has had her garden plowed and has started to plant some of her flowers. Her neighbors will be glad to have her with them again. Mrs. M. S. Davis and daughter, Mrs. Henry B. Reed, of Kingston have been visiting at the Deputy home and calling on old friends in the place. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Depuy and son, Dorr, of New York city are expecting to spend the week-end with his mother and sister. Church services in the Reformed Church: Church school, 9:30 a. m.; morning worship, 10:30 a. m.; evening worship at Clove chapel 8:30 o'clock.

Cast Rehearsing.

The cast of "Mamma's Baby Boy" will rehearse at Ramsey Memorial Hall in the Elmendorf Presbyterian Church this afternoon. This rollicking three-act comedy will be presented next Friday evening at 8:15 o'clock by the Christadelphian Society, a young peoples organization in the local church. The cast has been carefully trained and it is expected that a full house will witness the performance Friday evening. Tickets have been reported doing very well, according to Fred Carpenter, president of the Christadelphian, who urges those wishing to be sure of attending to buy their entrance cards without delay.
